

a place of opportunity

Animated video script - a place of opportunity campaign

If you're in the last year or so before graduating, no doubt you're thinking about starting your career.

Consider a job in government – we're very different to what you might think.

You probably already know about the great work of our nurses, doctors, police and teachers.

But we're much more than this.

We're also scientists, analysts and economists.

We're researchers, social workers and communicators; lawyers, programmers and policy makers.

In fact, we're almost every job and career you can imagine.

To build our statewide team, we need a new generation of people who want to make a difference, who are looking for a job with meaning and who will bring with them new ways of thinking.

Start your career in government and you could work on huge infrastructure projects, important community programs, initiatives to strengthen our economy, or plans to help Western Australians stay healthy and live in inclusive, vibrant communities.

You'll be tackling the challenges our state faces – finding and implementing innovations and solutions.

In short, you'll be part of making sure we're all ready for what the future holds.

Our range of graduate and cadetship programs has so much to offer – opportunities for dynamic career paths, training, job security, flexible working and the reward that comes from serving the public.

We want people from all walks of life and every background because we know that diversity in teams can help make our great state even greater.

The WA public sector.

A place of opportunity.
