We wrote this factsheet to explain how guardianship works if a friend or family member is your guardian

Things you will need to understand

A guardian is a person who makes decisions for someone who can't make their own decisions.

When we use the word OPA, it means the Office of the Public Advocate.

The Public Advocate works here, she makes decisions about people with decision-making disabilities.

When we use the word Tribunal, it means the State Administrative Tribunal.

The Tribunal decides if a guardian is needed.

The Tribunal is not formal like a court.

What is a guardian?

A guardian is a person who makes decisions for someone who can't make their own decisions.

What is a represented person?

A represented person is someone who has a guardian.

Who can be a guardian?

A guardian can be a family member. For example:

- a husband or wife
- a mum or dad
- a grandparent
- a brother or sister
- an aunt or uncle.

A guardian can be a friend.

A guardian can be The Public Advocate.

This factsheet explains how it works if your guardian is a family member or friend.

Why does a person need a guardian?

Someone might see that a person they know cannot make decisions for themselves.

This could be for a number of reasons, such as having an intellectual disability, mental illness, dementia or an acquired brain injury.

A guardian will help this person make decisions.

How do you get a guardian?

If a person cannot make decisions for themselves, someone can apply to the Tribunal for help.

The Tribunal may talk to other people in that person's life, like family, friends, doctors, care providers and supporters.

The Tribunal has a meeting to talk about the person and find out what they need help with.

The Tribunal then decides if the person can make their own decisions.

You can learn more by reading our 'How does an investigation work?' easy read factsheet.

If the Tribunal decides that the person cannot make their own decisions, they may appoint a guardian.

The Tribunal can choose:

- someone from the person's family
- a friend
- the Public Advocate.

This factsheet explains how it works if the guardian is a friend or family member.

What does a guardian do?

A guardian who is a friend or family member makes important decisions for a represented person who can't make their own decisions.

A guardian can only make decisions that the Tribunal says they can make.

Where possible, a guardian will help the represented person to make their own decisions.

Decisions can be about where a represented person lives, who they live with, health treatment, services and contact with others.

A guardian will ask for the services and support a represented person needs.

When making a decision on behalf of a represented person, the guardian tries to find out what that person wants.

A guardian may ask the represented person's other friends and family members what they think.

A guardian will listen to the represented person when making decisions, but they cannot always do what that person wants.

A guardian will only give information about the represented person to people who need it. For example - a doctor.

What if there is a problem?

A represented person will always be told what they can do if they are not happy with a decision.

A represented person has the right to say that they do not want a guardian or that they would like a different guardian.
