Is someone you know vulnerable?

1. If someone you know has a disability that affects their decision-making it means they might not be able to make a decision by themselves.
2. Many things can cause a decision-making disability like:
3. Dementia – a type of disease that affects your memory.
4. Acquired brain injury – this is a type of brain damage that happens after birth and can be caused by disease, not much oxygen going to the brain or a hit to the head.
5. Brain damage caused by drinking too much alcohol or taking drugs.
6. Mental illness
7. Intellectual disability
8. Another way of saying of a person has a decision-making disability is to say they 'do not have capacity'.
9. Some people might have problems and be in danger if they have a decision-making disability.
10. Some people cannot look after themselves or stop other people hurting them.
