Examples

Synergy or Horizon Power customers

1	Harry moved to WA in July and opened a Synergy account for his new residence. He isn't eligible for the first instalment, but Synergy will automatically apply the second instalment to his account in December because he opened a new account between 17 June 2024 and 18 November 2024. He doesn't need to apply for the credit.
2	Max received the first instalment of the credit on his Synergy account in July. In August he moved to another house and closed the old account. If Max opens a Synergy or Horizon Power account for the new address before 31 March 2025, he can contact his provider to ask about transferring the credit to his new account.
3	Dave had a Synergy account at his home on 17 June 2024. In July, Dave moved into a sub-metered apartment and permanently closed his account before Synergy applied the first credit instalment. Dave can no longer receive the credit from Synergy and should speak to RevenueWA about his circumstances.
4	Taylor had a Synergy account at her home on 17 June 2024. In July, Synergy applied the first credit instalment to her account. In September, she moved into a sub-metered apartment and permanently closed her Synergy account. Taylor isn't eligible for the second instalment payment and can't apply for a new credit, part payment or refund from RevenueWA.

5	Jade is a tenant and lives in a house that has a meter supplied by Synergy. The Synergy account connected to the property is in her landlord's name and they pass the bill on to her. Synergy will automatically apply the credit to the electricity account. Jade's landlord should pass on the benefit of the credit to her.
Caravan parks
6	Robert is a resident in a caravan park and is supplied with electricity through a sub-meter. The caravan park manager calculates Robert's electricity consumption and invoices him for his usage. Robert should apply for the credit through RevenueWA before 30 November 2024.
7	Wendy was travelling in her caravan and temporarily staying at a caravan park on 17 June 2024. She is not a permanent resident of the caravan park. Wendy can't apply for a credit for her temporary site but may be eligible for a credit for her usual place of residence.
Subsidised electricity
8	Sue leases a property from her employer and receives an electricity subsidy as part of her employment terms. Her employer doesn't invoice her for her electricity costs because the subsidy offsets her electricity costs. Sue should apply to RevenueWA and provide evidence that her subsidy covered her electricity costs for the period including 17 June 2024. If Sue didn't receive an electricity subsidy and wasn't required to contribute to her electricity costs, she wouldn't be eligible for a credit.
Ancillary dwellings
9	Alice rents a granny flat on the land behind Paul's house. The land is not subdivided and is serviced by a single electricity meter. For postal services, Paul's house is described as 15A and Alice's granny flat is described as 15B. Paul has a Synergy account and invoices Alice for 40% of the usage under the utility clause in Alice's lease agreement. Paul receives the credit on his Synergy account. Alice can apply to RevenueWA for a separate payment for her household.
10	Isobel's property has a main residence at the front of the lot, with a smaller self-contained dwelling behind it. Her son Teddy occupies the dwelling but continues to live as part of Isobel's household. Teddy doesn't have a separate mailing address and isn't invoiced for his electricity costs. His house isn't considered a separate household from the main residence and isn't eligible for a credit.
11	Ryan owns a dual key property and leases both units to tenants. There is a main Synergy meter connected to Unit A and a sub-meter which runs off this and supplies electricity to Unit B. The electricity account is in Ryan's name. The property manager receives the invoice from Synergy and invoices each tenant for their usage. Synergy will automatically apply one credit to the electricity account. Unit A should receive the full credit and the tenant in Unit B should apply to RevenueWA for an equivalent payment. The credit is not intended to cover administrative account fees payable by Ryan.

Exceptional circumstances

Brett was due to move into his new apartment on 7 June 2024. Due to urgent repair work required to the building, he was unable to move in until 24 June 2024. As his previous lease expired on 6 June 2024, Brett stayed in a hotel while waiting to move into his new apartment. Brett can apply to the Commissioner for payment of the credit under exceptional circumstances by uploading to his online application any documents that support his claim, including:

- a detailed written explanation of his circumstances and
- evidence that he incurred electricity costs before and after 17 June 2024.

The Commissioner will consider exceptional circumstances applications on a case-by-case basis.

Note: If Brett's new residence is supplied by Synergy or Horizon Power, he should contact his new provider to ask about applying the credit. RevenueWA cannot consider applications from Synergy or Horizon Power customers.
